MILLION THINGS.

They've All Been Put Into Song, and the King of Burut Cork Will Sing Them to the Puople—A Specimen Stanza, Showing at a Philanthropist Dockstuder Would

Be Had He His Way About the Matter.

The inimitable Lew Dockstader is to the fore again. He breaks out anew next Monday night. He is the great irrepressible. If doesn't get twenty-four brand new, crisp, sparkling, rib-splitting ideas every twentyfour hours he feels as if he were getting dull. But he always gets them, and has to throw away enough to run an ordinary show for a year, because life is too short for him to be es funny as he knows how in the time that he

The new thing Lew will spring upon the public next Monday night is an awfully fetching topical song called "If I Were a Millionaire." The composition is by Mr. Monroe H. Rosenfeld, who made such a rattling success with his recent song, "With All Her Faults I Love Her Still."

The music of " If I Were a Millionaire," is as lively as a cricket, and the things that Dockstader would do if he were one cover all the popular fads of the day. Words and music are in perfect keeping, and to be sure that it shall go as it ought to, the King of Burnt Cork, Lew Dockstader, will sing it himself. It promises to be the great hit of the season in the way of a topical song.

Sackville West; lour young celibate of the Mayoralty, Hugh Grant; the sportive Richard K. Fox; that pervasive young feminine Vidocq Nellie Bly: little Judge Duffy, of the thousand newspaper paragraphs; the departed and ever-to-be-regretted Crowley; the departing Belva Lockwood; the doughty John L., who came so near to being a dear departed, but concluded to be a dear remainer—a very dear one to several ambitious puglitists—all the popularities and The Evenino Woald, from whose cheerful nudging of prospective millionaires the jdea of the song was taken, will receive the flattering attention they so richly deserve.

Through the courtesy of Dockstader and Mr. Rosenfeld The Evening Woald can furnish its readers with a specimen stanza of the song, and they will be able to form some idea of what they may expect next Monday night, when Lew will layoralty, Hugh Grant; the sportive Richard Mention some things that I'd do If I were a millionaire. Here is the stanza :

I'd give the ladies all a vote,
If I were a millionaire.
I'd build a navy that could float,
If I were a millionaire.

I'd make conductors on the "L." Speak English when the streets they yell, Or lock them all up in a cell. If I were a millionaire.

I'd ask Miss Nellie Bly, who knows, Id ask Miss Nellie Bly, who knows.
The reason why girls can't propose.
That druggist's clerk I'd quickly kill
Who makes a fellow up a pill
And charges a five-dollar bill.
Our wives out shopping I would send
That "surplus" that we've got, to spend.
The widows all I'd husbands get.
And Broadway clean I'd keep, you bet.
Each dude, with supercilious phiz.
I'd stuff and put where Crowley is.

I'd stuff and put where Crowley is.

I'd send a bundle of nice tracts
To Ingersoll—all full of facts.
The stage bouquets we see employed
I'd have all made of celluloid.
Be one would last a season through,
And not a single night or two.
Night-keys I'd make to let you in
When to the "Lodge" you say you've been!
So late folks needn't use their knives
Or boots, and needn't wake their wives!
I'd have a brake put on the jaw
Of every lively mother-in-law!
And one thing more, I'd even stoop
To lift old Coogan out o' the soup,
If I were a millionaire.

It is rather a good thing that Lew isn't so

It is rather a good thing that Lew isn't so much of a millionaire as to give up shining with his dark brightness at us over the footlights.

One of the good things that one could do if he were a millionaire would be to buy a season ticket to Dockstader's. Chrystallized carbon is a diamond, and that's the kind of charcoal dandy Lew is. Go and hear the song, and see if it isn't worth your trouble!

Sullivan Going Back to Beston To-Morro -Outlook for a Fight - Billy O'Brien Thinking of a Race for Bleyeling Women -A Fair Philadelphian Who Would Be a Female Littlewood.

John L. Sullivan leaves for Boston to-mor row. Charlie Johnson, of Brooklyn, declared yesterday that in the matter of keeping appointments John is not to be relied noon. Sullivan agreed to meet Johnson last Tuesday, and the latter, after waiting four hours in vain, was pretty much disgusted, Yesterday Sullivan sent him word that he would meet him at 2 o'clock at his salcon.
Mr. Johnson was on hand, and found that another wait of a few hours was in store for him.
However, Sullivan came across later in the day, and at the conference then held it was decided to post $5,000 forfeit and challenge either Mitchell or Kilrain to fight for $10,000 to $20,000 a side. A further conference was appointed for to-day at the Clipper office.

A member of the N. G. S. N. Y. has proposed that a six-day race, open to five men from each regiment in New York and Brooklyn, be inaugurated.

Charles O. Walton and Nate E. Clark, who are to skate a five-mile race in the Fifth Ave-nue Rink, Brooklyn, to-morrow night, are trying to arrange to race Wallace Ross and any one he names, roller skates against road-scyllers.

William O'Brien has taken a desk in the office of Richard K. Fox, and is now thinking about a new scheme, which he believes will be a great attraction at Madison Square Garden. It is to start a bicycle race of six hours every evening for a week, the contestants to be women. He has received a letter from Bessie Macbeth of Philadelphia, who processes a desire to become a "female Littlewood." She says her record for seventy-two hours is 256 miles 9 laps.

The Crescent Lawn Tennis Club, of Mount Vernon, has sold its club headquarters and expects to build a large club-house next year at an estimated cost of over $15,000. This club, organized four years ago, has a mem-bership of eighty, and is a very successful organization.

Before George Littlewood, the champion six-day racer, sailed for England he signed a paper agreeing to submit his racing affairs to the management of William O'Brien, which signing was witnessed by Happy Jack Smith and E. C. Weatherley. Mr. O'Brien is going to Atlantic City to-morrow to accept Jimmy Albert's challenge and talk over the match. Mr. O'Brien denies the authority of a lengthy interview, published in the Philadelphia Press yesterday, making him, say that Dominick McCaffrey could whip John L. Sullivan. "Any man on earth with a good left hand can beat McCaffrey," said he.

Phil Dwyer said last evening that he was well satisfied with the result of the sale of thirteen of the horses yesterday. This sale leaves the Dwyer stables with forty-eight horses, nearly all of which will be wintered here. Next week the stallion Pontiac and two yearling fillies will be taken to Lexington, Ky. The fillies will be left to run out a year, and will then be brought back to train for three-year-old stakes.

IN THREE BARS.

A TALE OF TO-DAY.

By GEORGE R. SIMS, AUTHOR OF "THE LIGHTS O' LONDON," &c., &c.

(Synopsis of Bar No. 1.)

Tom Simpson, senior partner in the firm of Simpson & Co., having travelled all over the world advertising his famous soap, finds himself at fifty rears rich beyond his widnest expectations, and determines, therefore, to settle down for the remainder of his life and enjoy his hard-earned wealth. In this he is ably seconded by his pretty daughter Letty, who, at the time of the opening of the novelette, has just come out in society and is the schnowledged belle of the season.

chance of a big advertisement for Simpson's Soap was not forgotten. He felt that it would be a magnificent opportunity for "paragraphing" the press of the world:

"The beautiful Miss Simpson, who was leading to frown, and he mantic little thing, and that he would never consent to her marrying anybody without a title; of course, if the young man had a title, she might love him as much as she liked."

Letty said nothing but the press of the world: To tell the truth, even in his love and adweek united in marriage to His Grace the Duke of Knocklands, is the only daughter and heiress of Thomas Simpson, esq., the chief proprietor of Simpson's Soap."

The American trade would certainly benefit by the marriage. The fair Americans would feel that in using Simpson's Soap they were, in a manner, shaking hands with the British aristocracy.

Letty had not been out very long before she had plenty of admirers, and to her father's delight it was evident that a young Duke, who had been rather severely damaged on the turf and had gone prematurely bald, was in-clined to make himself agreeable. Letty was very charming and very gracious to her nu-merous admirers, but when her papa told her that if there was any young nobleman she fancied for a husband she was to be sure to iet him (her papa) know and he would try and buy him for her, Letty laughed and blushed and said: "Oh, paps dear, what nonsense; as if any nobleman would marry

And when her papa pressed her she grew just a little angry, and stamped her little foot and exclaimed: " Papa, don't you ever try to make me an advertisement for your soap, because I won't have it. I intend to marry for love or not at all."

"What nonsense, papa! The idea of your listening to what those wretched, gessiping people say. Why they've engaged me to a dozen gentlemen already."

Letty's manner was so unconcerned that her papa was relieved, but he thought it as well to say that he would never consent to such a match. Smithson was a very nice young fellow; he had been to Eton and Oxford, and his father was immensely rich, but he wasn't the husband for the beautiful daughter of Simpson's Soap. His father and Mr. Simpson were great friends, and the families visited each other, but Mr. Simpson never contemplated an alliance by marriage with the King of the Hoardings.

It was about a fortnight after this that Mr. Smithson, pere, called on Mr. Simpson, and after smoking a cigar in the library with him—a frequent occurrence—he suddenly threw bereinhall at his heart's head by ecolly ask.

This was the position of affairs when one morning while driving to town Mr. Simpson was astonished to see the hoardings of London covered with magnificent posters of a new soap. "Scraphim Soap "it was called, and angels were represented in the act of washing their wings with it.
"It's blasphemous," roared Simpson, but he confessed that it was a startler. When he got to the office all his clerks were talking about it. When he went out all his acquaintances button-holed him and asked him whose soap "Seraphim Soap" was.
The next day he found Seraphim Soap all over the newspapers, this time in the chape of a little poem to the following effect:

SERAPHIM SOAP. Why are the angels' wings as white As the snow that hes on the Jungfrau's slope? Because they are washed after every night With a fragrant cake of Scraphim Soap.

With a fragrant cake of Serapaim Soap.

"It's worse than blasphemous," screamed Mr. Simpson, as he threw paper after paper down in disgust, but he felt that whatever its character it was a tremendous advertisement. He jumped into a hansom and drove round to the retail houses. "What was the new soap? Who was behind it?" he asked everywhere.

Nobody knew. But the entire trade had received circulars stating that the Seraphim Scap would be advertised for three months before any was supplied. At the end of that time an enormous demand having been created and an enormous stock manufactured, orders would be solicited, and the metropolis and the provinces would be supplied simultaneously in order that there should be no jealousy.

"Had any orders come in from customers?"

"Oh, yes, the new soap was on every-body's tongue. The public were asking for it everywhere."

Mr. Simpson returned to his office in a ter-rible rage and talked the matter over with his
